Q: Is it necessary to use a SQL query to filter out those users who are in a particular flag state? So far, I've always used the query `SELECT * FROM tableName WHERE columnValue @someValue OR columnValue IS NULL` Is there a performance benefit to using an OR equivalent to the following: `SELECT * FROM tableName WHERE (columnValue @someValue OR columnValue IS NULL) AND @someOtherValue = 0`

A: I would expect the performance difference to be insignificant in most applications. For example, the following two queries: `SELECT * FROM t1 WHERE (t1.field1 'test') AND t1.field2 = 32;` `SELECT * FROM t1 WHERE (t1.field1 'test') AND (t1.field2 = 32);` Would typically be implemented as: `SELECT * FROM t1 WHERE (t1.field1 'test') AND (t1.field2 = 32);` So, the underlying query is the same in both cases. So, there is no overhead for performing the check explicitly, as you can see from those queries. The potential performance gain is for the optimization stage. For instance, if the optimizer could merge together that first query and that last query, then it could eliminate the second condition and reduce the query to the first condition. But, I would not expect such an optimization.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a vertical circuit, and more particularly, to a vertical circuit used as an output circuit and a switching circuit.

2. Description of the Related Art FIG. 4 is a circuit diagram showing a structure of an example of a conventional vertical circuit. This vertical circuit is disclosed f678ea9f9e
